

THE $3,000,000 BURGLARY.

THE MANHATTAN SAVINGS BANK ROB-BERY DESCRIBED AGAIN.

Watchman Kelly Telling How he was Forced to Give Up the Combination to Open the Safe—What Inspector Wm. Murray Found.

After much questioning and challenging, principally by Judge William A. Beach, the court found for William Kelly, who is accused of conspiracy in the Manhattan Bank burglary, a jury was impaneled yesterday to try him. The recent rumors of an attempt to intimidate and influence Patrick Sheehan, the principal witness, have intensified the interest in the trial, and when Assistant District Attorney Russell opened the case, the court room was uncomfortably crowded.

Kelly, a large built young man with a peculiar face, his forehead is retreating, the brows are prominent, and overhang small, shutted eye; the nose is flat, and the mouth crooked. The long upper lip looks firm. His face was smooth and pale, and the auburn hair was carefully arranged. He was well dressed in a brown checked suit, and his linen was white. A small seal ring decorated one of the fingers of his white, plump, well-care-for hands. He frequently consulted with Mr. Beach, and studied many pages of printed testimony carefully. He is evidently no common thief. The indictment under which he is tried is peculiar. There are three counts. The first charges him with burglary in the second degree in breaking into the residence of Louis Werke in the daytime by picking the locks; the second with breaking into the residence of Louis Werke in the daytime by means of a false key, and the third with burglary in the third degree in breaking into the safe of the Manhattan Savings Institution, all three after conviction for previous felony.

Assistant District Attorney Russell explained to the court that on May 1, 1868, Kelly was tried in the General Sessions for robbery and sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment, and that ever since he has been serving his sentence.

That same year, Thomas Kelly, accused of the robbery of the bank on the 27th of October, 1878, when a gang of men, in broad daylight, burst into the vaults, and took $3,000,000, was tried, condemned, and sentenced to life imprisonment.

He was released on parole, and was paroled to the care of Louis Werke, and one of them was William Kelly, the prisoner. For three months there was no trial of the robbers. Then John Kelly was tried, and he was found guilty, and was kept while outside. Then Patrick Sheehan, who had been a witness in other trials, was arrested, and he was tried, and was found guilty of the plot, and Kelly was arrested. He was the messenger between Jimmy Hope, the chief of the conspirators, and Sheehan. Their co-operation was complete, and when Kelly got the bank, he consented to do that when drunk, but when sober was reluctant. On two or three occasions he told Jimmy Hope and Danny O'Donnell, who were his confederates, that he was unwilling to commit the robbery, and they forced him into giving them the combination of the vault door lock, and then robust the bank of nearly $3,000,000.

The two robbers, Sheehan and Kelly, were paroled to the care of Louis Werke, and the Senate 20th Instant and to legislative.
